Molly Stark State Park Recreational Trails

Molly Stark State Park contains about two miles of foot trails. In wintertime, cross-country skis and snowshoes can be used on the foot trails and park roadways. Bicycles are limited to the paved and gravel roadways. Park entry fees apply during the operating season of Memorial Day weekend through Columbus Day.

Mt. Olga Trail

1.7 mile loop, 1.5 hours. Blue blazes.

This moderate trail starts across from the park office and rangers' quarters and ascends moderately with several switchbacks through northern hardwoods, and spruce and fir woodlands. Evidence of the land's agricultural past is visible near the beginning, including old farm machinery and several stone walls. Near the 0.9 mile mark, a short spur trail leads to the Summit of Mt. Olga, elevation 2,450 feet, and to the Mt. Olga lookout tower. This former fire watchman's lookout is kept open for recreational viewing of the expansive 360 degree views of the southern Vermont Green Mountains, the Berkshires to the south in Massachusetts, and Mount Monadnock to the east in New Hampshire. The Searsburg wind farm is visible to the west, and Mount Snow can be seen to the northwest.

The trail descends through similar woods, crossing the route of an old turnpike road several hundred feet below the summit spur. The trail ends at the top of the campground.

Hogback Mountain Conservation Area

Molly Stark State Park is adjacent to the Hogback Mountain Conservation Area (Marlboro Town Forest) lands. Several trails are available in the Conservation Area, including one which links to the state park.

Town of Wilmington Trails

The Shearer Hill Trail (maintained by the Wilmington Trails Committee) links to the Mt. Olga Trail on the western portion.

History of Molly Stark State Park

A picnic wayside was constructed here on public land by the Civilian Conservation Corps in 1932. In 1939, citizens of Brattleboro and Wilmington donated the 100-acre parcel to the State of Vermont for the creation of a state park. Later that same year, Olga Haslund (the namesake of Mt. Olga) donated 48 acres to the State. The campground was constructed about twenty years later and opened in 1960.
